To care for the chairs please see the notes below.

Bonded leather resembles genuine leather, but it lacks the characteristic variation in colour and texture.

Bonded leather refers to a polyurethane product that has leather shavings sprayed onto the back. The polyurethane component of bonded leather makes a durable chair material, and it is one of the easiest leathers to care for. But bonded leather is not invulnerable to stains, wear, or damage from harsh abrasives. Like other types of leather, this material requires regular cleaning to prevent stains and fading as well as conditioning to prevent cracking.

Position bonded leather chairs away from direct sunlight from windows or skylights. While bonded leather is durable, it is vulnerable to fading when exposed to sunlight.

Wipe with a soft, damp cloth to remove dirt and body oil. For tough dirt or stains, clean with leather cleaner or a mild non-alkaline, nondetergent soap and a soft cloth. Test the cleaning product on a hidden area of leather to make sure it will not cause discoloration or damage to the leather. No Matches Found. Please try your search again.

Repeat cleaning with a damp cloth every two to three weeks to remove dust and to prevent staining. If your chair gets a lot of use, you may have to clean it more often.

Blot spills up with a soft, dry cloth or paper towel as soon as they occur. Do not rub stains or spills. This can cause bonded leather to wear rapidly.

Vacuum the chair regularly to remove dust, dirt, and debris. Use a soft brush attachment to avoid tearing or scratching the leather and use a crevice tool to remove dust and debris hiding in the seams.

Apply a tablespoon of leather conditioning treatment labelled for use with bonded leather products to a soft cloth. Leather conditioners are available at most leather furniture stores.

Test the conditioner on a hidden area of the chair to ensure it will not cause discoloration of the leather.

Massage the conditioner onto the bonded leather, however, refrain from rubbing. Pay attention to the areas that get the most wear, such as the seats and arms.

Wipe away excess conditioner with a dry cloth. Bonded leather should be treated with a conditioner about twice a year.
